Bronchoscopy is considered a routine examination prior to transplantation and is commonly used for management of preoperative airway abnormalities. Incidence of incidentally detected incidental non-invasive pulmonary disease is not known and the impact of this upon transplant recipient and donor health and length of stay remains unknown. We have performed a retrospective review of bronchoscopy in 294 adult donors at our institution between 2001 and 2006. Of those cases, 147 (50%) were performed for donor history, 81 (28%) for lung function testing, 23 (8%) for clinical reasons, 17 (6%) for autopsy, and 13 (5%) for other reasons. One hundred and seven cases (36%) had pathology identified, mostly related to the upper respiratory tract. A total of seven cases (2%) had serious pathology identified, all requiring intensive care. There were no deaths related to the pathology. A minimum of 10 days follow-up was obtained in all donors. In conclusion, incidental non-invasive pulmonary disease is not uncommon, but the results of bronchoscopy rarely have a significant impact on the outcome of the donor and/or recipient.Day 16: Pessimist or Optimist? Today, I want to ask you to make a choice: Are you a Pessimist or an Optimist? Why am I asking you to choose? Because I have identified a few Pessimists in my life and I want to remove them from the building and so, I have prepared a story about a tragedy which happened to me recently. You might think that I am exaggerating, but I am not. You might think that I don't give enough credit to optimists. You might think that I am just one of them. But, you can choose to believe that and you can make your choice, too. This
