How to use Photoshop The first step of using Photoshop is opening the program. As with most programs, you can use Photoshop by accessing the "File" menu and choosing the "Open" command. This will bring up a window with a variety of menus offering multiple ways to start using Photoshop. In the first menu to the right of the File menu, you should see the "File" tab where you can access several useful commands. The next section explains the most useful commands for beginners.

Photoshop Interface Photoshop is designed for use with the mouse. If you are a Windows user, you will find that you must use a mouse. However, you can use your track pad on a Mac or "point" your device to the screen where you want to put your cursor. This simply involves using the top or bottom navigation buttons to move your cursor left or right and then clicking it to place your cursor where you want to type. The default Photoshop layout is simple and logical. You will need to move to the "View" menu in the top-right corner of the interface. The "Display" menu will allow you to quickly change from small to large interface. The "Window" menu will allow you to quickly change your work area to anywhere on the screen. The "Edit" menu has useful options such as the "Undo" command and the "Redo" command. The "Position" menu is used to align images, shape, and paths. The keyboard offers some text options and the "Home" button will restore the default Photoshop command to the top of the menu bar. At the very top, you will find the "Image" menu where you will find most of the commands to save, edit, and place images. The "Select" tool is used to select the object. The "Background" tool is used to choose the background, which can be a color, image, or combination. The "Rectangle Select" tool helps to select a rectangular area. The "Lasso" tool is used to select an area by drawing a line. The "Magic Wand" tool is used to select an area of an image that is the same color. The "Pixel Edit" tool is used for the more fine-grained editing that will save you time. It is possible to use the Photoshop commands with the arrow keys on your computer keyboard, but using the mouse is the only way to have complete control of the program. Photoshop offers a new

There are three main goals for bone cancer in Alaska: (1) to improve access to quality care for Alaska Native people (ANPs); (2) to share resources and promote collaboration among Alaska-based oncology investigators and Alaska Native people; and (3) to develop ways to provide clinical trial options to ANPs. The Alaska Native Center for Cancer Prevention and Control (ANC) proposes to expand the work of the nonprofit organization based at Providence Alaska Medical Center (PAMC) to provide statewide access to cancer prevention and control programming for ANPs and to conduct clinical trials to control specific and aggressive cancers among ANPs. ANC will provide this care through a combination of care coordination activities, case management and advocacy to deliver supportive services, and through clinical trials to develop and test new cancer control methods. To address the first goal, ANC's established cancer prevention and control care coordination and case management services will continue. ANC's Network member Advisory Board will provide input on ways to improve cancer prevention and control services and, for the first time, will include ANPs. ANC will also work with Native communities and other private-sector entities to increase rural access to care. To address the second goal, ANC will develop and conduct clinical trials of new methods to control specific cancers or symptoms of specific cancers in the state. ANC will apply for and be granted a Special Grant from PAMC to fund its proposal, which builds on the foundation of past successes in cancer prevention and control and on a strong set of current community partners. ANC's Clinical Trials and Pathways Component will provide the infrastructure for effective clinical trial conduct. The Component will identify patients to participate in pilot trials of new methods of cancer control. ANC will work with Community Research Advisory Boards to select among eligible and priority patients, and to develop methods for communicating with patients regarding research participation. ANC's Community Research Advisory Boards will select patients and mentor investigators, and ANC staff will help facilitate communication between the patient and the appropriate clinical trial. ANC's Community Research Advisory Boards will develop lay summaries of clinical trials for presentation to ANPs, and ANC staff will facilitate the translation of protocols into community presentations. The Component will also work with local tribal leaders and tribal health care providers to facilitate recruitment and oversight. ANC will work with tribal health care providers to recruit patients to participate in clinical trials.
