Q: How does one become an air traffic controller in the UK? I'm going to start training for a career in aviation as an air traffic controller. As such, I'm studying for my Flight Instructor Theory Knowledge (FITK) at the moment. From what I understand, there are two routes into the profession. The first is by gaining an ATPL (Aeronautical Pilot Licence). However, once the airframe rating is earned, the student must then complete the ATPL Knowledge Program to earn the ATPL. Now I have an Aeronautical Transport Pilot Licence and my initial FITK training, and have earned my airframe rating, but I don't have any experience on a light aircraft. I have an interest in working in the airline industry for my career so I want to learn about how to work on an aircraft and understand how to perform certain functions in a basic instrument flight rules environment. In short, how do I then become qualified to work as an air traffic controller? Do I get my ATPL by completing the ATPL knowledge program, or can I skip this step altogether? Edit: I'm a US citizen and I haven't been able to find any information relating to how one becomes a controller. I'm looking for any sort of information as I'd like to go through the correct channels. A: To be a controller at a UK airfield, you need to be a PPL (private pilot licence), and you need to pass a competency test to gain the ability to instruct at night. This comes in two forms - a written test on FAA syllabus material, and a set of practical exams which have an FAA syllabus. You'll not be sent home if you don't pass, but you'll need to re-take the written if you do. The training to pass the practical exams to become an examiner is at least 6 months. You don't have to be studying for that in advance, but have the funds available in cash before you start. You then get a further six months to train as an examiner, which is currently unpaid - your employer (not your FTR scheme, who will train you in their own time) pays the flying in that time, and the job description is generous. I've never personally done it myself, but there's a good outline of the overall process here. A: The UK is part of the EU and this should get you
