As such, the results of the present study are consistent with the findings of previous studies conducted for the antimicrobial activity of P. gingivalis and P. intermedia, where lactic acid was the primary bacteriostatic agent \([\text{B8}]\]. Ginger has been widely used in the treatment of various infectious diseases. One of the main constituents of ginger, eugenol, has strong antimicrobial activity against a wide range of bacteria, fungi and viruses \([\text{B8}]\]. Since ginger is a natural product with an open structure and biological activity, it is capable of interacting with substances in the oral cavity. The disintegration of oral epithelial cells induced by ginger rhizome aqueous extract was attributed to the presence of organic acids, which were known to damage the cell membrane of oral epithelial cells by inducing a loss of turgor, inhibition of proton (H⁺)-ATPase, and the induction of cell death \([\text{B9}]\]. In the present study, the effect of ginger rhizome extract was mostly observed on S. sanguis, indicating that it is more effective against S. sanguis than other bacteria. Thus, ginger extract has the potential to suppress dental caries in association with the activities of its active constituents such as eugenol. 5. Conclusions {#sec5} ===== P. gingivalis inhibited the growth of S. sanguis, whereas P. intermedia influenced the growth of both S. sanguis and A. naeslundii. Although both P. gingivalis and P. intermedia had strong antimicrobial activity against S. sanguis, the growth of A. naeslundii was unaffected by P. gingivalis, but it was unaffected by P. intermedia. The results of this study suggest that ginger extract can affect the pathogenesis of dental caries by suppressing S. sanguis, which plays a major role in the development of the disease.
